Ok. Yes, if you're up for it, come in.

And in that case, we can just do the next update tomorrow – no need to send anything tonight.

If it would be helpful I'm happy to come in!

If so, just let me know if you want the update tonight before I leave or I can send it in the morning to you.

I think we can just add them to the morning report. And I realize it's Friday and you won't be in.

Before you go, would you mind pulling some representative tweets and writing a couple quick sentences about tone & whether it's about the same or if it's changed? I'll add them into the morning report.

Using hashtags.org, can you see if you can calculate hashtag analytics for tweets that posted since the last report, rather than the past 24?

Summary of Sentiment and Major Messages:

The mood on Twitter has improved a little from yesterday. It's not as harsh, but it is still pretty negative. The same reoccurring complaints are still there: "the EPA puts regulations on the rest of the country but caused this," "EPA is hypocritical by celebrating other achievements while this happened," and there is concern for the Navajo Tribe. Along with the belief that this happened on purpose and we are being negligent.

The majority of tweets are people sharing articles or summary statements about what an article says.

Some notable tweets are from Sen. Gardner, Rep. Crawford, Rep. Salmon, and CO Senate Dems.

Hi all,

Here's a quick rundown of Twitter during the past 24 hours. Drop a line with any questions. We'll continue to send these regularly.

Big thanks to Taylor for her work on this!

Thanks,

Jay
